The Flathead Watershed in Northwest Montana is an amazing and beautiful place to live. The inspiration for my paintings comes directly from the beauty I see in the land, and in the wildlife that occupies the area of Glacier National Park and the surrounding watershed. The variation on seasonal changes provides an infinite amount of challenging subject material to paint.

The summer sun, fall colors, winter snows, and spring rains provide the variety for any artist's joy of expression. Wildlife small and large are in abundance, and the opportunity to photograph my subjects at close range exists on a number of occasions. Working from life (plein-aire) is much more exciting and challenging than working from photographs, but not always as convenient.

The Flathead Watershed is an ideal location for artists who enjoy capturing in their artwork the wild natural world around them.
